PROFESSORS SAY ...

Why you should take this course.

"This course will help any student learn to acknowledge not only that texts have multitude ways of being read, but also that what the reader brings individually to the text is vastly important. Why does historical context matter when it comes to a publication? Why have all readers been taught to read "like men"? What does Freud have to do with ANY literature? This is a must for those of you contemplating education as a major."
